Meredith Kennedy After a lifetime of mess, Katie declared that enough was enough. He left, Katie, eating dinner on the floor of his home office, among the stacks. When I lived in Washington DC after college, my roommate at the time called me Pig-Pen. It was a well-deserved nickname: A few months earlier, as a parent of the University of Virginia, I had lived on the Lawn, a particularly picturesque campus area. Outside my dorm room were pristinated pavilions and a lush, grassy court. But there was an epic mess in my room. Three Mile Island was easier to clean up. On graduation day, my parents drove away from our home in Arlington. I thought I had about an hour to create some kind of purity or at least an update on the state of biohazard. I hid clothes in boxes, stuffed papers and books in panties and found what I thought was a really creative way to handle my dirty dishes: I hid them in the trunk of my car. This is a true story that I would like to attach to my youth - but unfortunately history recently repeated itself. Last December, I was cleaning my apartment before the holiday party. Cut me in the garage and get lucky trash cans in the back of my mini-truck. Audrey Hepburn's poster stared at me like she was saying, "?? It was the wake-up call I needed: Holly Golightly helped me see the light. My home isn't dirty. It's just confusing. My home office has become ground zero for my hoarding habits, with magazines piled at waist height and enough reading glasses to open my own optical shop. And the American Classic VHS film collection at the top of the bookshelf. When I removed Dusty Gone with the Wind on that epic cleaning day, I conjured up the best Scarlett O'Harani: Because God is my witness, I will never be a mess again! I've started. Over and over again, scientific studies have linked clutter and disunity to depression, anxiety and general accident, and I can tell you that emptying the space will also help clear your mind. I'm a happy person, but I'm even happier with a clean house. I have set goals that are simple - for example, always put a dirty dish in the dishwasher. (There is a much higher probability that it will be cleaned there than in dodge's trunk.) When I'm in my home office, I force myself to grab one pile before I leave. My new mantra is: If you're unsure, throw it away. If it's worth donating, recycling or selling, go ahead. Right in the trash, by the way. Old habits die hard, so I don't expect miracles overnight. But finally, at the age of 56, I can say with a certain pride: There is no more rubbish... In my right trunk. To make it more storage space in the walk-in computer mode, the home depot (SKU# 458-424) free-preserved metal storage shelf unit (Husky Model# ERZ782478W-4) was installed for plastic storage containers. On the other hand, housewrap stapled pins to cover the bare wall insulation. The metal cabinet bar fasteners were then screwed onto the pins, and the closet bar was installed so that rarely used clothes could be stored in zippered hanging bags. See Build a raised attic storage platform to add atlait storage space. The hanging shelf was built to hide the mess of wires and arrange electronics on a side table that serves as an entertainment center in riales' home. We started by building a three-sided box of 1 x 12 timbers. After the box was stained and sealed, a piece of 1.12 pieces was attached to the box at the bottom x the sideboard. The box was then screwed into x 1.12 to put it in place. A DIY hanging shelf installed under the side table entertainment center. After the electronic components were installed on the suspension shelf, plastic zippers were used to mess with the wires. 1 x 4 was painted the same color as the walls and installed under the sideboard to hide the wires from view.
